WHEREAS, Dr. King was the symbolic leader of the African-American Civil Rights Movement, a pastor, an orator, Nobel Laureate, and humanitarian who dedicated his life to ensuring equality and justice for all; and

WHEREAS, Dr. King helped found the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) in 1957, and served as its first president; and

WHEREAS, in 1963, Dr. King helped organize nonviolent protests in Birmingham, Alabama, that drew national attention to the struggle for civil rights and to the hateful and brutal responses of the local law enforcement; and

WHEREAS, in 1963, in his famous "Letter from a Birmingham Jail," Dr. King wrote that "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."; and

WHEREAS, Dr. King helped organize the 1963 March on Washington during which he delivered his eloquent and moving "I Have a Dream" speech from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial on August 28, 1963, in which he said, "I say to you today, my friends, though, even though we face the difficulties of today and tomorrow, I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream. I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up, live out the true meaning of its creed: 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal.'"; and

WHEREAS, Dr. King received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964 for his work toward passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and for combating racial inequality through insistent use of civil disobedience and nonviolent resistance; and

WHEREAS, Dr. King helped to organize the monumentally inspiring Selma to Montgomery marches in 1965, which assisted in advocating for passage of the Voting Rights Act that year to guarantee all African-American citizens the right to vote; and

WHEREAS, in 1968, Dr. King was supporting the sanitation workers in Memphis in response to the city's pattern of neglect and abuse of its African-American employees, and was planning a national occupation of Washington, D.C., to be called the "Poor People's Campaign," when he was assassinated at a Memphis hotel on April 4, 1968; and

WHEREAS, speaking to a group of striking sanitation workers in Memphis the night before his assassination, Dr. King said, "We've got to give ourselves to this struggle until the
