Background: In 2000, Washington declared May of each year to be Asian Pacific American Heritage Month. According to the 2010 census, the Asian population grew faster than any other race group in the United States between 2000 and 2010. As of the 2010 census, there are about 4 million people of Chinese decent alone or in combination in the United States, a growth of 40 percent since the 2000 census. Washington is home to the seventh-largest Chinese American population in the United States. The 2010 census documented 94,198 people of Chinese descent alone living in Washington.

Staff Summary of Public Testimony: PRO: Chinese laborer's built the transcontinental railroad which brought opportunity and prosperity to the region but then were expelled from the state and country through the Chinese Exclusion Act. The Chinese exclusion act of 1882 is not widely known in our history but specifically targeted Chinese Americans by trying to limit their population in the United States. The Chinese Exclusion Act lasted over 60 years and was only rescinded in 1942 when China was a major United States ally during World War II. Unfortunately only a few years later the borders were sealed again until 1979 when the government embraced the free market economy again. The contributions by those railroad workers and Chinese Americans have been largely ignored by the history and this bill would provide a conduit for information and learning about Chinese Americans who played a vital role to this state. Chinese people have been migrating to the United States for over a half century and high tech companies have attracted more Chinese people to help contribute to the economy. Chinese today are facing backlash and education has an important role in changing that by sharing our culture with the community to help people in Washington understand Chinese culture and history and avoid bias and discrimination. This bill would help expand the teaching of Chinese American history in public schools, but it should also include all educational institutions, public entities and private organizations.
